

iRes engages in trans-disciplinary research into networks, creativity and encounters across art, design, media, critical theory and creative technologies.

lab_Off Centre is a series of events where theorists, artists, philosophers, curators and others are invited to present their research and art projects which take place in or/and consider the periphery in various dimensions.

The questions that underpin this series are: how do we understand 'periphery' in the network society whose structure is based on nodal points connected by many edges; does the idea of 'periphery' and 'centre' cease to exist in the network condition or is it being translated into its new environment?

lab_Off Centre is interested in presenting projects with explicit or implicit connections to the relationship between centre and periphery. The common characteristic for all the invited projects, is their self-organisation and distribution, collaborative nature and grounding in rigorous research.

iRes warmly invites everyone to the second lab_Off Centre. This time it will take a form of a workshop leading to a conversation about Post Autonomy project and notions of what the idea of Post Autonomy could entail within art.

Post Autonomy reflects the state of contemporary art. A meeting place and hub for discussion and exchange about ideas that extend the understanding of Post Autonomy. Post Autonomy stems from the idea that modern art, as a research or understanding of autonomy has reached its limits in comprehending autonomy. In that respect art can be seen to have exited autonomy. What comes after autonomy in art can be discussed by Post Autonomy.

Using a practice-oriented analysis of cultural, social, and political forces the aim is to develop a new mental framework out of which art can be reinvented.

David Goldenberg is an artist, curator and writer living in London, UK. He initiated the movement in the form of a website called Post Autonomy. The site functions as a research instrument into the concept of Post Autonomy.
